Taylor Made Designs

Clothing garments these days have come on leaps and bounds and the material and fabrics used are designed for multi-climatic environments. Polo Shirts these days have the moisture management fabric which helps to regulate the body temperature, making you comfortable in most weather conditions and can provide the perfect base layer should the temperature start to drop. Fleece has progressed and now have a tighter weave (called "microfleece") which makes them wind and water resistant, and along with the moisture management to regulate the body temperature, making the perfect layer item. Yachts are now also sailing a lot further afield and into more extreme conditions. When visiting these places you need garments that can deal with arctic conditions and any cases of severe weather. This calls on niche suppliers to provide highly technical items but at relatively low order quantities.

Sea Design

Today's generation of yacht crew is more inclined to "think out of the box" in regards to yacht and crew uniform in general. Sea Design see more colour and creativity in the uniform. The request for custom designed garments is now the norm. Of course some yachts still prefer to keep a more traditional presence, but even on the most conservative yachts the demand is still to add a detail that will make the crew uniform bespoke, with accents such as coloured epaulettes, belts and scarves. The detailing helps to give the whole look a modern and individual look if there is not the budget to have a complete custom uniform.
